What Every Woman

Ought to Know

Every woman knows that nothing is more important to her than to keep her complexion as a perfect complexion than skin, hair, eyes, nails, teeth, lips, etc., in the house.
Every woman should know of the reliable ex-terminator for all vermin of this nature—"Stearns' Electric Hat and Brush Paste." This paste is ready for use and drives rats and mice out of the house to die. Put in sink and on shelves at night, cockroaches and water bugs are dead in the morning.
Money refunded if it fails. 9 ounce box, 50c—16 ounce box, $1.00. Sold by druggists everywhere, or sent express prepaid on receipt of price.

EVENING HOURS

HANDY WAYS OF A HUSBAND.
When you have time, George," said Mrs. Andrews one evening, "I wish you would put up that shelf in the kitchen."
"It is so hard to do anything after dark," sighed her husband. "If you can wait till Saturday afternoon I'll do it then."
"That's what you said last week," Mrs. Andrews remonstrated. "I waited till Saturday and then you said you would put up the shelf when you finished reading the paper. By that time you had forgotten it."
"Well, then, I suppose it's up to me to do it now," he said. "Where's the shelf?"
"Out in the kitchen. Do you want help?"
"You needn't stir," he said, generously. "I can do it all right."

In a few minutes after he disappeared his wife heard his apologetic tones. "I'm sorry to bother you," he said; "but where do you want that shelf?"
His wife could not count the number of times she had told him she wanted it put up over the sink, but she went patiently and indicated the place with her finger.
"Oh, seems to me you did say something about that," he acknowledged.
"It won't take me a minute, so you needn't bother to wait when you're so tired."

She went back to her sewing and had taken several stitches before he called again. "Say, do you know where the mischief the hammer's gone to?"
"It is in the tool drawer," she answered. "That is, unless you've had it since I put it away."
"It isn't there," he cried, triumphantly. "I've already looked there." Mrs. Andrews went out to the kitchen and hunted for the missing hammer.

"It beats all how things get lost in this house," he said. "That girl is the limit. It's sheer carelessness."
"That's what I've always said," Mrs.
Andrews agreed, sweetly, as she fished the hammer out from under the stove. "Here it is."
Her husband had the grace to laugh.

"That time I was stung," he said.
"I used the hammer this morning to pound a nail in my shoe and I remember my foot struck it as I left the room, so I must have kicked it under the stove. Where are the nails?"
"Aren't screws better?"
"Screws!" he exclaimed. "In that wood? Nothing but long nails would hold that shelf. I haven't the slightest idea where there are any."

Mrs. Andrews found the nails and went back to her work.
"Alice!" her husband called presently. "Would you mind holding the shelf while I pound?" She went out again and held it while he hammered away for dear life. She was also properly sympathetic when the nails bent.

"There seems to be a confounded beam in the way," he said. "I'll have to bore holes first. You go and sit down and I'll call you when I need help."
He was as good as his word, for she was scarcely seated when she was summoned again.
"Do you know where the bit is?"
he asked. "I've been hunting an age for it."
She opened the tool drawer and took it out.

"Well, that beats all!" he exclaimed. "I looked there. It must have been under that box. It's very hard to find anything with that box of nails in there."
She had sewed a full seam when she looked up and saw him standing in the doorway.

"You were quiet," she said, "I didn't hear you do much hammering."
"I had to give it up," he told her.
"These nails are worthless and I knocked quite a bit of plaster down trying to make them stay in. I'll get better nails and put it up some other time."

When his wife had taken care of the tools and sent for the girl to sweep up the plaster she finished her sewing without so much as a reference to the shelf. Indeed, it was not mentioned again for six weeks.
Then Andrews spoke of it himself.
"Great Scott!" he cried, agitated, "I put up that shelf at once. I never thought of it till I put my hand into

GRACE VAN STUDDIFORD
BECOMES A BANKRUPT
Comic Opera Star, Recently Divorced, Owes Twenty Thousand Dollars.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—Grace Van Studdiford, the comic opera star, who returned to the stage seven or eight years ago after her husband had lost his fortune in speculation, has filed a petition in bankruptcy. She owes $20,904 and her assets consist of $10 cash in the Hudson Trust Company of this city, some furniture and clothing that is exempt, and her interest in some real estate and live stock at Wellston, Mo., a suburb of St. Louis.
Before her marriage to Van Studdiford the actress was Gracia Quive, playing a small part with the Bostonians. Van Studdiford was a real estate speculator and turfman. A few years after his marriage his real estate firm was wiped out and he had a bad year on the turf. The wife returned to the stage as a star in "Red Feather" and was a hit.
